The essays assembled in Agnotology show that ignorance is often more than just an absence of knowledge; it can also be the outcome of cultural and political struggles. Ignorance has a history and a political geography, but there are also things people don't want you to know ("Doubt is our product" is the tobacco industry slogan).

Agnotology is a term recently coined by science historian Robert Proctor and linguist Iain Boal to refer to the study of ignorance and its cultural production (Proctor 2008). While epistemology is the study of knowledge, how and why we know things, agnotology is the study of how and why we do not know things.
