In computing, a benchmark is the act of running a computer program, a set of programs, or other operations, in order to assess the relative performance of an object, normally by running a number of standard tests and trials against it. The term benchmark is also commonly utilized for the purposes of elaborately designed benchmarking programs themselves.

General My original Android benchmarks were compiled to only run on ARM CPUs using 32 bit instructions. These are available from a copy in British Library Archives or from here. The newer ones automatically select benchmark code for ARM, Intel or MIPS processors at run time, for 32 bit architecture or 64 bit when supported.

Overclocking in the context of computing devices refers to making them "run faster" than originally intended. More specifically it is the configuration of computer hardware components to operate faster than certified by the original manufacturer, with "faster" specified as clock frequency in megahertz (MHz) or gigahertz (GHz). Commonly operating voltage is also increased to maintain a component ...
