Blood Atonement has all the ingredients of a good murder mystery plus a fascinating account of the use of DNA and genealogical research to solve the case. There are two main characters, Detective Chief Inspector Grant Foster, an honest, hardworking police officer who is recovering from serious injury and Nigel Barnes, a talented professional genealogist, who, as yet, is unable to trace his own birth parents.

If by blood atonement is meant the atoning sacrifice of Christ, the answer is Yes. If by blood atonement is meant the shedding of the blood of men to atone in some way for their own sins, the answer is No. We do not believe that it is necessary for men in this day to shed their own blood to receive a remission of sins.

Without the blood there was no other possible way for man to be saved. No matter how good he may be: Lev 17:11 'For the life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar to make atonement for your souls; for it is the blood that makes atonement for the soul.' Blood (Heb. dam) is life, life is blood.
